Mandala, painted by one of Jung's patients

1-year foundation course in Analytical Psychology
Based on Jungian theory and practice

Description of the course:

A 1-year course that through a combination of theory and practice will introduce participants to the basic concepts of analytical psychology and provide understanding and insight into how the inner and outer world interact and influence

- all aspects of psychological development
- relational skills in work, group and family contexts.
- complex issues in the individual and in the culture.

Seminars will be given by teachers at the Jung Institute and by other members of DSAP.

Participation in the one-year foundation course is one of the admission requirements for the C.G. Jung Institute's advanced programmes for Jungian Psychotherapist MPF and Jungian Analyst IAAP, respectively.

Target group

1) Applicants to the C.G. Jung Institute's advanced education programmes, where the foundation course constitutes the first year. See admission requirements on the next page.

2) Psychotherapists or others in the health sector, employees in HR departments, teachers, pedagogues, etc. who need new inspiration / continuing education in Jungian psychology.

Content of the course

The theoretical part consists of an introduction to theories on the structure and development of the psyche, typology, complexes, symbol formation, archetypes, the inherent creativity of the psyche and the individuation process etc. This is illustrated using classical Jungian theory (Jung, Neumann, von Franz and others) as well as more recent Jungian theorists (Samuels, Asper, Kalsched, Skogemann, Vedfeldt and others). The practical part consists of training in the interpretation of symbolism, both in life stories and everyday situations as well as in dreams, images and films, which is the mythical universe of our time. The practical part is based on the participants' own experiences and seeks to strengthen personal resources. At the end of the course, a written assignment of 5 - 10 pages must be submitted if you want to apply to the C.G. Jung Institute's higher education programmes for Jungian psychotherapist MPF and Jungian analyst IAAP, respectively.

Format of the course
