Healing the Wounds of Trauma in Children: Safety, Love and Playfulness

Presentation 1: To be in the front line each day, meeting traumatized children at the Children's House in Bergen Police District has given me a unique and extraordinary experience and insight into their horror of trauma and dissociation. I will share a clinically rich and comprehensive overview of the trauma treatment and crisis intervention given. It will also be a presentation of judicial forensic interviews with children, and the importance of medical examination since their body often can be the scene of crime. I will also bring in the deep experience of love, healing and playful approaches to serious problems in therapy such as dream work, imagination, drawings and sand play. The children often choose their own expression through spontaneous playful movement. The challenge can be to follow the child and to avoid interfering with their psychic expression.

Presentation 2: I will give examples of single traumatization and the gliding scale to more complex traumatization with dissociative symptoms in children and young people. I will also touch upon the theme of children's experience of betrayal from the family system and society in general. The denial of children's stories of violence can be a shameful experience and leave them alone, isolated with their painful experiences. I am often in court to talk about the children's cases and I will give a glimpse of my experience of the judicial system. The society struggles to acknowledge and to integrate the children's stories; their reflex can be denial, avoidance and attacking the child in the attempt to hide what is going on in the shadow part of the society. The shadow of society is not only a theoretical expression but a truly felt experience that can be a challenge for the well-being, even for the professional helper.
